Henkels & McCoy has an extensive history of constructing and managing the building activities of utility projects converting overhead power and communications facilities to underground construction. We have the technical knowledge as well as the construction experience required to be successful in designing and building both OH and UG utility infrastructure. Based on this background, H&M has provided quality construction and management services to utilities throughout California and across the country.

Understanding the work is essential to managing construction activities, especially on large and complex projects. Whether managing our own crews or those of another contractor, Henkels & McCoy has proven that it has the personnel and technical expertise necessary to be successful in these sorts of projects.

Henkels & McCoy uses Construction Management to ensure successful execution of a project. Our Construction Management philosophy utilizes pre-construction expertise to include cost estimating, value engineering, scheduling, and coordination of all construction activities during the construction phase of the project. Proper pre-construction planning and communication of project goals will ensure a greater probability of a successful project.
